May 13, 2020

Do as you have said, otherwise nobody will believe in you.

If our actions do not match the words which have been said, then we cannot expect others to do what we hope they should do for their own well-being.

Essentially, that is what the men, women and children have done who have been formally canonized as “saints” in our Church. Whether they were martyrs, popes, single, married or nuns, those who have been declared worthy of the title, “Saint,” were incredibly consistent in living as they have spoken.

Did the saints do it perfectly? Of course they did not. Each of them was a sinner like the rest of us. So, the fact they were sinners while in this world, but now are declared as having an extraordinarily special title as a the assembly of the saved in heaven through the life, death and resurrection of Christ Jesus, there is definitely hope for all of us!

Consequently, what you claim you will do is not enough. What you do is the person you are to the one to whom you have spoken, as well as to others who have heard you.

May God bless you and me with the grace needed to be a saint!

Peace,
Fr. Marc
