I have a peculiar question for you to consider answering. It may be helpful to someone in the future, if you can decipher an answer today. Maybe, years from now, you will be able to share it with someone who never lived what you have lived through during these past few months.

The question; “Thus far, do you have a curiously helpful memory of an experience you encountered during the pandemic? An experience that was inspirational. Let me give you some assistance...

- Did someone, unexpectedly, provide help to you when it was most needed?
- Did you do something which you never believed you could do for someone who needed help?
- Did you recognize in someone there was a ”hero” that dwelt inside of him/her, but you had not recognized it until that moment.
- Did the passing of someone you loved dearly, enable you to love others who still live, even more dearly?
- Did you ever realize how remarkably brave nurses and doctors and first responders could be?
- Did it ever dawn on you how outstanding are the teachers of your children?

When it is all said and done, we’ll take away a whole lot of painful memories of our terrible foe, COVID-19. But, don’t let that disease-causing monster take away a memory of something that happened which was a blessing in disguise, which you can share with someone in the future.

So, what is your memory?

God bless you.
