Happy, Happier, Happiest!

As the famous American author H. Jackson Brown, Jr. wrote, "Remember that the happiest people are not getting more, but those giving more."

There is nothing wrong for a person to try his/her best to attain what has value in this world to experience happiness. But, in his/her efforts to do so, it should be remembered all that is attained will not provide the ultimate happiness. Whatever one has, no matter the value, it provides happiness that is only transitory.

Enduring happiness for which we search during our lifetime does not have a value that can effectively be measured as less or more in this world. The said happiness is experienced when we unite ourselves with our Lord God which gives each day lovingly to each of us. When we do so, giving more, trying to have a pattern of the same intention as our Lord God, then each of us will be truly happy. Actually, we will be happiest, and not anything less.

Peace
