The Sixth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Luke turns to the favorable side of the reaction to Jesus by recounting the choice of the Twelve, and the healing and preaching to the multitude in the plain, a parallel to Matthew's Sermon of the Mount which was directed to the Twelve. In his sense of order Luke has transposed the two scenes of Mark, the healing of the multitude and the calling of the Twelve, so that the Twelve are with Jesus when he heals all among the great multitude on a plain. That means that the Lucan Sermon on a plain which begins in 6:20 is directed to all disciples, not only to the Twelve. Four Lucan beatitudes open the sermon, echoing the program for the ministry read aloud in the Nazareth Synagogue. These beatitudes address those who are actually poor, hungry, mournful and hated now. The accompanying "woes" perhaps of Lucan creation and resembling the contrast in the Magnificat, hint at the antagonism engendered among the addressees by the affluent. The comparable condemnation in James might suggest that the reason for the violent dislike was the practice of injustice by the rich. Yet, as we shall in later chapters at times but not consistently, Luke seems to regard the very possession of wealth (unless distributed to the poor) as corrupting one's relationship to God. Luke's ideal is the Jerusalem community of those believers who give their possessions to the common fund as he describes in Acts 2:44.

El Sexto Domingo del Tiempo Ordinario

Lucas recurre al lado favorable de la reacción a Jesús al relatar la elección de los Doce, y la curación y la predicación a la multitud en la llanura, un paralelo al Sermón del Monte de Mateo que fue dirigido a los Doce. En su sentido de orden, Lucas ha transpuesto las dos escenas de Marcos, la curación de la multitud y el llamamiento de los Doce, para que los Doce estén con Jesús cuando él sana a todos entre la gran multitud en una llanura. Eso significa que el Sermón de Lucan en una llanura que comienza en 6:20 está dirigido a todos los discípulos, no solo a los Doce. Cuatro bienaventuranzas de Lucan abren el sermón, haciéndose eco del programa para el ministerio que se lee en voz alta en la Sinagoga de Nazaret. Estas bienaventuranzas se dirigen a aquellos que en realidad son pobres, hambrientos, tristes y odiados ahora. Las "aflicciones" que acompañan, tal vez de la creación de Lucan y que se asemejan al contraste en el Magnificat, hacen alusión al antagonismo generado entre los destinatarios por los ricos. La condena comparable en James podría sugerir que la razón del desagrado violento fue la práctica de la injusticia por parte de los ricos. Sin embargo, como veremos más adelante en los capítulos posteriores, pero no siempre, Lucas parece considerar que la posesión misma de riqueza (a menos que se distribuya entre los pobres) corrompe la relación de uno con Dios. El ideal de Lucas es la comunidad de Jerusalén de aquellos creyentes que entregan sus posesiones al fondo común como lo describe en Hechos 2:44.
