Dearest Family,

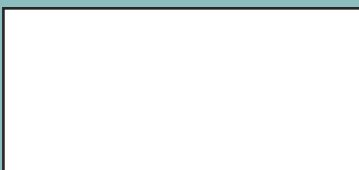

Greetings in the Risen Lord! As you read this I will be away on a short holiday and Fr. Robert Campbell will be joining you for the weekend Masses. Please welcome him warmly to our community. Fr. Campbell is a religious priest, meaning he belongs to a religious order. In his case, he is a Norbertine Father whose community is located in the South Valley of Albuquerque.

As we celebrate this Second Sunday of Easter, also called Divine Mercy Sunday, we are reminded of the sheer power of God's mercy as we hear the words of the Gospel. In a counterintuitive move, Jesus actually comforts the apostles and identifies Himself by showing His wounds. Truly, in a disarming manner, the great King who is now risen validates the experience of the apostles and greets them with hope and peace in the place where their trauma left them speechless and afraid. We are reminded of the words we heard on Good Friday, "by his wounds we were healed!" Sometimes the greatest way to show others mercy is by recognizing and admitting our own need for mercy. As all imperfect people, we have wounds that we bear and often hide thinking them shameful. But it just may be these wounds that bring others peace with hope of healing and sharing their own scars and bruises. We are the Church of sinners and for sinners, and we would do well to mimic Our Lord, the sinless One who gladly took on our wounds, such that we could reach out and mercifully heal others. Peace be with you!

In His Risen Joy, Fr. Daniel
