If the kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed, and faith like a grain of mustard seed, faith is then truly the kingdom of heaven, and the kingdom of heaven is faith. Whoever therefore that has faith, possesses the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of heaven is within us, and faith is within us. Now, let us, from the nature of the mustard seed, estimate the force of this comparison. Its seed is indeed very plain, and of little value: but if bruised or crushed it brings forth its power. So faith first seems a simple thing: but if it is bruised by its enemies, it gives forth proof of its power, so as to fill others who hear or read of it with the odor of its sweetness. At one time the faith is bruised, at another time oppressed, at other times it is sown. The Lord himself is the grain of mustard seed. He was without injury, but the people were unaware of him as a grain of mustard seed of which they took no notice. He chose to be bruised, he chose to be crushed; he chose to be planted in the earth as a seed. For it was in a garden that Christ was taken prisoner, and likewise buried: he sprung up in a garden, where he also rose from the dead, and became a tree. You also then sow Christ in your garden, for a garden is a place that is full of flowers and various fruits in which by virtue of your labor he may grow and breathe forth the multiple sweetnesses of his many virtues. There where fruits are, let Christ be found. Plant the Lord Jesus. He is a seed when a man takes hold of him: he is a tree when he rises again, a tree that give shade to the world; he is a seed when he is buried in the earth, he is a tree when raised to heaven.
