Pastor's Column: Tuesday October 6 is the feast of Blessed Francis Seelos. Previously I have written of his service and death in New Orleans in 1867. The following an episode which occurred in Baltimore in the 1850's. It shows us the saintly outlook on life: Night sick calls were a standard part of the rector's duties. He could have had his assistant priests do this work, but he preferred to do it himself. One such sick call was to the deathbed of a young woman. Only when he was in the second floor of the house did he realize that it was a house of ill repute. Rather than leave the place, he did his priestly duties and prepared the dying prostitute for eternity. He administered to her the last sacraments and took leave of the evil place. Unfortunately, an anti-Catholic newspaper got hold of the fact and wrote a blistering article rife with innuendo and base

Twenty-seventh Sunday in Ordinary Time

insinuations. When some of his confreres showed Seelos the article, he said only, "Well, I saved a soul."
