FALL BACK NEXT SUNDAY
This is a reminder that next Saturday evening before going to bed, we should turn our clocks BACK one hour to reflect the end of Daylight Savings Time for this year.

THANKSGIVING FOR FAVORS RECEIVED
Our gratitude goes out to Bill Curtis and Willy Bauer for fixing up our church sign on Old Mammoth Road and clearing a lot of underbrush along our lot on Ranch Road. Thanks, guys, for all you do. Speaking of signs, blessings to Carrie Taylor for re-painting our church sign along 395 in Bridgeport. Nice work. The “sign” of our love of God is the sacrificial offerings of our time, energy, talent, and money in service to the church. As Scripture says: “Do not appear before the Lord empty handed.” (Deuteronomy 16:16)

PRAYERS
Our prayers are requested for Bonnie Zwart, Mark & Mary Anne Bewsher, Tina Quan, James Zvetina, Pat Glynn, Bobbie Engstrom, Ed Power, Diane Evans, Raquel Rodriguez, John Gracey, Bob Tomko, Jr., Virginia Reyes, Elizabeth Cauzza, Kay Reilly, Mary Jo Ferreira, Julie Rogers, Josefina Flores, and for the repose of the soul of Mark Kirkner and Barbara Head.

DAILY MASS

Thirty-first Sunday in Ordinary Time

We were gentle among you, as a nursing mother cares for her children. With such affection for you, we were determined to share with you not only the gospel of God, but our very selves as well, so dearly beloved had you become to us.

FIRST READING:
Malachi 1:14b—2:2b, 8–10
And now, O priests, this commandment is for you. . . . You have turned aside from the way, and have caused many to fall by your instruction; you have made void the covenant of Levi, says the LORD of hosts, I, therefore, have made you contemptible and base before all the people, since you do not keep my ways.

At a time when the actions of a few priests have left devastation, harm, and mistrust in their wake, and some bishops have been exposed as shamefully complicit in these reprehensible crimes, it is with particular interest that we read a diatribe against the villainy of the priesthood straight from the mouth of God.

The prophet Malachi does not mince words on behalf of the Lord. The priests are accused of accepting sacrificial offerings from some people that weren't really sacrificial.

A true sacrifice engages trust in the ultimate apostle, but we would not be firm supporters of Jesus if he did to us what these priests did to God. The twenty-first century is no easy time to be a priest, occupying a role more ambiguous than at any time in the history of the church. The old honors due the priesthood do not come automatically anymore, nor does the trust that that the Roman collar guaranteed in an earlier generation. Today, a pastor will be known not by his clothes, his title, or his liturgical function, but through the authenticity of his presence as God's word-made-real. Of course this is a goal for every Christian, but the job description of the designated leader, the priest, is to lead the rest of us to our common destination. It's not a role for the faint of heart, and it's not going to come easier anytime soon.

SECOND READING:
1 Thessalonians 2:7b-9, 13
With such affection for you, we were determined to share with you not only the gospel of God, but our very selves as well.

Saint Paul likes to think of himself as an ultimate apostle, but we would not be wrong to consider him also a quintessential pastor. This section of his letter, for some time considered a defense of his ministry against some perceived accusation, is now understood as Paul’s “autobiographical confession,” in the style of Jeremiah and later Augustine. With no apparent gender squeamishness, Paul compares the approach of his team (he, Timothy, and Silvanus) with the role of the nursing mother, and also the guidance and encouragement of a father (v. 11). What they offered the community was not simply the gospel proclaimed, but a caring and intimate relationship. They brought themselves into their work, so that the word they preached really did become flesh in them.

Isn’t this the description of the best pastors you’ve known? Dare we withhold ourselves from our ministry, offering a thin word without a presence and a person behind it? The twenty-first century is no easy time to be a priest, occupying a role more ambiguous than at any time in the history of the church. The old honors due the priesthood do not come automatically anymore, nor does the trust that the Roman collar guaranteed in an earlier generation. Today, a pastor will be known not by his clothes, his title, or his liturgical function, but through the authenticity of his presence as God’s word-made-real. Of course this is a goal for every Christian, but the job description of the designated leader, the priest, is to lead the rest of us to our common destination. It’s not a role for the faint of heart, and it’s not going to come easier anytime soon.

GOSPEL:
Matthew 23:1-12
As for you, do not be called ’Rabbi.’ You have but one teacher, and you are all brothers. Call no one on earth your father; you have but one Father in heaven. Do not be called ’Master’; you have but one master, the Christ. The greatest among you must be your servant.

Can we afford to spend one Sunday a year talking about the role and goal of leadership with our assembly? It seems we can’t afford not to. Jesus talked a lot about leadership. He speaks as often to the scribes and Pharisees as he does to the crowds in general. Jesus was a firm supporter of leadership, grooming at least twelve men and not a few women throughout his ministry to carry on the roles of proclamation and pastoral care. Jesus understood that what leaders said and did was significant, and could be like a millstone around the necks of the innocent. Authority had to be wielded responsibly and with integrity. A leader’s words and life should proclaim the same message.

One is tempted to argue: but are not all leaders likewise sinners? Most certainly! This is why any trappings of leadership — the titles, the marks, the chief seats in the assembly — are to be seen as symbolic of something greater. When clerical garb draws attention to the cleric and not to the gospel he proclaims, his ministry is on thin ice.

Religious leadership, as today’s gospel suggests, took a wrong turn at some point, becoming its own message instead of pointing to the One who ultimately leads. In the light of this gospel, today may be a good day for church leaders to remind their people once again that they are human, in need of prayers and support, as vulnerable as anyone to temptation and failure. Bishops, priests, and deacons accept the burden of bearing the gospel to the community, but we ourselves are not the word we preach. + + + + + + +

If Jesus said, “Call no one on earth your father,” why do we call our priests, “Father”? Good question. I think Jesus was using hyperbole, like when he said, “If your eye causes you to sin, pluck it out! If your right hand causes you to sin, cut it off!” Heck, if we took that literally, we’d all be half blind and left handed! We need to understand the verse in its context. Jesus was talking to men who “loved” the titles “Rabbi” and “Father”. To be sure, such men lead our church today. Imagine people calling you “Your Excellency” or “Your Eminence”. I am particularly fond of “Padre” myself. Another J.J. Crowley I ain’t, but it’s fun to be so particularly fond of “Padre” myself. Another J.J. Crowley I ain’t, but it’s fun to be so
