SIXTEENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

His heart was moved with pity

The Gospel gives us a glimpse of Jesus as a compassionate shepherd. First, he is shepherd to the Twelve, his close collaborators in mission. They have just returned from their missionary work, and they report to Jesus what they did and taught. Seeing that they are tired and have little time to rest and eat as many people continually keep coming to them, Jesus instructs them to go by themselves to a deserted place to rest a while.

This shows that while Jesus sees the urgency and magnitude of their tasks, he realizes that the Twelve need to rest and replenish their energies. Their time alone could also be an opportunity for them to reconnect with the Father in prayer. This is something that many of us tend to forget or neglect: to balance our life between work and prayer and recreation. We are easily driven by work and the desire to earn more, perhaps because our needs and wants have multiplied. As a result, many complain of stress or burnout and unhappiness in their lives.

Second, Jesus is a compassionate shepherd towards the many needy and sick people who are following them. Jesus is moved very deeply as he witnesses how they walk along distances beneath the heat, in hunger, in thirst, through thick crowds. Many people likewise come to us, having no one to turn to for their needs except Jesus.

Jesus' example invites us to ask ourselves: Do we feel deeply towards those who approach us for help, for healing, for food, for hope? Or have we gotten so used to the experience as to no longer be moved? How do we nurture our heart in the mercy of Jesus? Around the world today, more and more people need compassion as they undergo extreme sufferings and difficulties: those in war zones, those trying to escape from violence, those in the throes of famine, those who are unwelcome and discriminated against. Do we feel their pains, and are we moved to join others in responding to their needs?
