Second Sunday of Lent

The readings for the Second Sunday of Lent highlight human encounters with the divine. From Abraham to the apostles, God's message has been consistent throughout salvation history: trust in the Lord.

The first reading from the Book of Genesis presents one of the accounts of God's covenants established with Abraham. It was significant to Paul that God rendered Abraham "righteous" by his faith alone, before the covenantal condition of circumcision (Genesis 17) and before the giving of the law to Moses (Exodus 20–26). In this single act of trust in the Lord by Abraham, Paul saw the justification by which Gentiles, who by their profession of faith in Christ, could be saved independent of the Jewish ethnic and cultic markers of circumcision and strict observance of the Mosaic law.

The Gospel reading is the transfiguration of Jesus, an event that revealed Jesus' glory to Peter, John, and James. Within the storyline of Luke's Gospel, God's voice heard by the apostles during Jesus' transfiguration—"This is my chosen Son; listen to him"—is a divine directive to heed Jesus' words during his journey and passion in Jerusalem. Just as Abraham was saved by his faith in God, so too, the apostles were called to have faith and trust in the saving words of Christ.

Description/Details: The Catholic Church is living through an extraordinary time of crisis and purification. Fr. Thomas Berg will speak candidly about that crisis, drawing attention to the reality of the many Catholics who have been hurt in their experience of the Church, especially by those entrusted with leadership. In response, he offers his book as a roadmap toward healing and renewed faith in Christ and His Church -- a way forward that invites all of us to deeper conversion. Published at the culmination of the Year of Mercy, Hurting in the Church invites readers to heed Pope Francis's call to incite a revolution of tenderness in the Church. Signing to follow.
