THE CONVERSION OF SYLVESTER ROSECRANS (1)
by Rev. L. W. Mulhane

While a cadet at West Point, [William S.] Rosecrans obtained a few books treating of the Catholic Church from an old Irishman, who was in the habit of paying periodical visits to the institution to sell books and papers. In company with another cadet, now Very Rev. George Deshon, Superior of the Paulist Fathers of New York, he became interested in the claims of the Church and it was not long until his logical mind was convinced; and finally, two years after his graduation, while he was Assistant Professor of Engineering, in 1844, he was, in his own words, "baptized sub conditione, because it was a vague tradition that in my early days a Protestant or Wesleyan Methodist minister at my grandmother's instance had baptized me, following the traditional ritual of the Church of England in so doing." Shortly after his marriage his wife also became a Catholic, and in 1846 he was instrumental in converting his brother Sylvester, who eventually became the first Catholic Bishop of Columbus, Ohio, within whose diocese was located his birthplace, Homer, Licking County. The brothers were much attached to each other and their correspondence, when the one was at West Point and the other at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, was frequent. After the younger graduated, he paid his elder brother a visit, and as the two were taking a walk one day, they chanced to pass a Catholic church; whereupon the young lieutenant, to quote the words of one conversant (2) with the facts in the case, said to his brother: "It is high time, Sylvester, for you to put an end to this procrastination of yours; come in here and get baptized."

Mechanically obeying the command, and entering for the first time in his life a Catholic church, the same authority tells the story of the Bishop's conversion: "They soon reached an altar, before which, to the young brother's surprise, shone a lighted lamp, although it was broad daylight. 'Let us pray here,' said the captain, 'in the Real Presence, for two graces, the grace of light to know the truth, and the grace of strength to follow it'; and with this he knelt down. Sylvester also knelt, as a matter of courtesy to his brother, but by no means to pray. He gazed around for a while at the works of art within reach of his eyes, but not being in the habit of kneeling long at any time, and his knees aching, he turned to look at his brother, whom he found absorbed in God.

"The sight was too much for Sylvester. 'Wretch that I am,' said he to himself, 'while this truly good man is so earnestly interesting himself with Heaven for my soul's salvation, I am indifferent, as if it were none of my business. God is everywhere, and therefore, here; I, too, will pray for strength and light.' And he did pray, so long and earnestly, that when he began to look for his brother, he found him in a remote part of the church. Up sprang Sylvester, and with agitated steps he approached the captain. 'Well, Sylvester,' whispered the latter, 'what will you do?' 'I wish to be baptized,' was the prompt reply; 'I hope the priest is at home.' Happily the priest was at home, and finding his caller already, thanks to his brother's good offices, well instructed in Catholic teachings, he had no hesitation in baptizing him and receiving him into the Catholic fold. Many years later, when the diocese of Columbus was erected, Rt. Rev. Sylvester Horton Rosecrans, who had been consecrated titular of Pompeiopolis, in partibus, on the feast of the Annunciation, 1862, and appointed Auxiliary to Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, was transferred to the new See, and at once took possession of his vinyard."

The following letter received by the writer some years ago, it need not be mentioned, is highly prized:

Treasury Department, Register's Office.
Dec. 11, 1886.

Dear Father Mulhane: -- Bishop Rosecrans was baptized at Cold Spring on the North River opposite West Point, N.Y., by the Rev. Dr. Villani, pastor of the Catholic Church at that place, and in charge of the station at the Post of West Point, in the summer of 1846. I was his godfather and my wife his godmother. I do not remember whether it was sub conditione.

My baptism in 1841 was sub conditione, because it was a vague tradition that in my early infancy a Protestant or Wesleyan Methodist minister at my grandmother's instance had baptized me, following the traditional ritual of the church of England in so doing.

Yours most truly,

W. S. Rosecrans

To the Rev. L. W. Mulhane,
Mt. Vernon, Ohio

LAWRENCE W. MULHANE

HISTORIAN/MT. VERNON PASTOR/CATHOLIC COLUMBIAN COLUMNIST

(Concluded, from Vol. XVIII, No. 11)

Anthony J. Lisska
Denison University

Catholic Columbian Columnist

As a weekly syndicated columnist for The Catholic Columbian, Mulhane attained great fame but probably little fortune. The Columbian was established by Bishop Rosecrans in 1875, soon after he became bishop of the new diocese of Columbus. Before coming to Columbus, Rosecrans both taught at the seminary in Cincinnati and was associated with Cincinnati's Catholic Telegraph. Rosecrans saw the need for a diocesan newspaper. Mulhane served as a columnist for this paper for over a quarter of a century. He wrote under the by-line of "R.C. Gleaner" and his front page column was titled "The Catholic Viewpoint". In his column, Mulhane wrote forcefully about a variety of topics central to Catholicism in the late Nineteenth and early Twentieth Century. The Columbian editor noted that Mulhane's writings "...were quoted in many newspapers and magazines of the country." Seen from the distance of nearly a century, one wonders—indeed, one is almost baffled—how, in turn of the century Mount Vernon, a busy pastor of a county-seat parish could be so well informed on the many issues central to a rapidly changing Catholic society and its principally immigrant churchgoers. One might argue that, with its strong railroad connections, Mount Vernon was not as isolated as it might appear from the perspective of the late twentieth century. Nonetheless, Mulhane must have mastered the essentials of what today is called "time management". Mulhane did have some connections with Kenyon College in nearby Gambier. An October, 1916, column discusses the founders of Kenyon College and the English family after whom the college was named.

-288-

Mulhane appears to have had a rather faithful following. Monsignor Herman Mattingly, himself a newspaper editor and published historian and genealogist, once told this author that while a university student in the 1920's, he and his classmates eagerly awaited the weekly appearance of The Catholic Columbian so that they might devour Mulhane's spirited columns.

The Debate with O'Daniel

It was as a Columbian columnist that Mulhane embarked upon a lengthy historical debate with the Dominican historian, Victor Francis O'Daniel. (8) The point of contention was the second oldest Catholic Church in Ohio. In his Catholic Encyclopedia article and in his History of St. Vincent de Paul's Parish, Mulhane argues that St. Luke's in Danville merited designation as the second oldest Roman Catholic Church in Ohio, after St. Joseph's in Somerset. In his Life of Fenwick, O'Daniel unraveled with care the origins of the first eight churches in Ohio. O'Daniel focused his attention on the date of dedication of the churches in question. He established with painstaking evidence that St. Luke's Church was dedicated in October, 1824. Thus, O'Daniel argued that the historical evidence suggested that St. Luke's is at best the seventh church to be dedicated in Ohio. Nonetheless, the Danville congregation had assembled earlier in the nineteenth century.

In the Columbian articles, Mulhane attempted to refute O'Daniel's account by appealing to oral traditions of Knox County's elder citizens and to various personal glimpses he had gathered over the many years he spent talking with the senior citizens about Danville and Mount Vernon. Mulhane used some of these sources in his 1895 book. Landlocked in Mount Vernon, Mulhane did not have readily available the many archival and library resources O'Daniel had. Hence, with greater access to the requisite materials, especially runs of early nineteenth century periodicals like the American Catholic Miscellany where early Ohio missionary reports were filed and published, O'Danilel could establish his case with greater ease and certainty.

Exemplary Pastor

Even given all his literary and historical activities, Mulhane never forgot that his primary vocation was that of pastor of a parish church. His forty year service as pastor of St. Vincent de Paul's parish is exemplary. He cared for the people under his charge with grace and civility. He built the new St. Vincent's Church in 1923, organized the parish school and administered his parish with zeal. The list of organizations affiliated with the parish is amazing, most of which began under Mulhane's early tenure as pastor. Nonetheless, when the new church was nearing completion, Mulhane exhausted his own personal resources, it is said, to complete the tower on the magnificent new St. Vincent de Paul Church.

In 1885, he inherited a parish so financially strapped that on January 1, 1886, he wrote the following in the chronicle: "Financial report read and cash balance on hand stated to be two cents, which caused a smile through the congregation." An excellent fund-raiser, by 1892 the old debt has been liquidated completely, notwithstanding the construction of a new school building in 1890. In 1893, Mulhane could announce proudly that free tuition was available to families of the parish sending their children to the school.

Bishop Hartley wrote the following about his former St. Aloysius Seminary colleague, indicating in particular Mulhane's continuing concern for education:

He spent the best years of his life as a priest there, and labored day and night for the welfare of the parish. He was an eloquent preacher, a splendid schoolman, and always held his place on the diocesan school board, helping to guide the educational work of the diocese. (9)

Mulhane died on May 2, 1925 in Mount Vernon's Mercy Hospital, an institution he founded. He had been quite ill since the preceding September, suffering from what then was called "pernicious anemia". His passing merited front page coverage in The Catholic Columbian. The editor, James J. Carroll, treated his weekly columnist's passing with due honor and respect. This engaging and thoughtful intellectual, pastor and historian from Mount Vernon would now have a silenced pen.

ENDNOTES

Mulhane's death merited front page coverage in the May 8, 1925 Catholic Columbian. This extended article serves as a reservoir of biographical information. In addition, the editorial page contains a lengthy eulogy on Mulhane. The final page of the Columbian, which always served as a local news item page, featured that week a long piece on Mulhane's funeral complete with comments from Mount Vernon Area business and professional persons. The librarians at Ohio Dominican College kindly permitted the author's use of the Columbian microfilm.

The microfilm of The Catholic Columbian includes Mulhane's weekly articles from which one can gather the wide range of his interests. His History of St. Vincent de Paul's Parish contains an autobiographical account together with a fascinating ten year chronology. The author is indebted to Jim Logsdon for bringing this chronology to his attention and for reading with care earlier drafts of this biography. Mr. Logsdon also helped the author understand the Know-nothingism common to Mount Vernon in the last century and the importance of rail connections for that Knox County Seat. Monsignor Herman Mattingly's narrative on St. Aloysius Seminary provides some references to Mulhane as a college student. However, Monsignor Mattingly’s article incorrectly lists the date of Father Mulhane's death as May 22, not May 2, 1925. The October, 1986 issue of the Bulletin repeats Monsignor Mattingly's mistake on the date of Mulhane's death.

TRADITIONS IN A CATHOLIC FAMILY
by Matthew K. Munhall

In my family both of my parents are Catholic and have been all their lives. All four of my grandparents were also raised in the Catholic faith. My Grandpa and Grandma go to Mass daily. So do my parents. I think this is a very good practice. We have been Catholic in my family for as many years as anyone can remember. My relatives keep many traditions from when they were younger, but many things changed in the Catholic Church over the years.

When my grandfather was my age he went to nine o'clock Mass every Sunday with his schoolmates. This Mass was set aside for all the school age children. He said, "the rest of the day was peaceful and spent with the family." There was no shopping, stores were closed and Sunday was a peaceful day when my grandparents and parents were young.

In my mother's parish, when she was in grade school, weekday Mass was well attended with sixty to seventy people attending in a parish of about eight hundred families. The priest most often did not give a homily at daily Mass and the Mass was said in Latin. My mother said, "I remember daily Mass as a very holy and peaceful time."

There are some things that my mother and father miss about the way the Church was when they were younger. My mother misses the fact that Catholics seemed to be in better harmony with each other and there was less disagreement. Also, she misses the greater reverence there seemed to be at Mass, especially regarding dress. My father misses the Latin Mass in that people seemed to attend more reverently also. He still serves Mass sometimes. My father still goes to retreats once a year. My mom still prays the rosary.

At St. Michael's parish we have a very successful festival and a large school. My parents have been very pleased with St. Michael's since their arrival in the parish in 1966.

Most importantly, the Catholic Church has helped my family become close to God our Father, Jesus and the Holy Spirit. My mother said, "the laws of God and the Church have always helped guide me through life and have also taught me the peace and joy that come from trying to do God's will."
