Pastors in this era were:
Rev. Hugh J. Gilbert, Sept. 1943-June 1950
Rev. Michael Wellnitz, June 1950-June 1956
Rev. Peter McEwan, June 14, 1956-
Rev. James P. Hanley, June 1963-June, 1966
Rev. Clarence Durbin, June 1966-

Father Marzluf was the last resident pastor for some years. Rev. Joseph Switalski was appointed assistant pastor at Shawnee, effective Feb. 5, 1955, with residence there; but his duty was to be administrator of the parish in New Straitsville, under Father Wellnitz’s direction.

Following the Second World War, things brightened a little in Shawnee. In 1948 Father Gilbert, the pastor, was caring for 203 souls. He also tangentially mentioned that strip-mining of coal had provided jobs in the area, when he noted that the process had not damaged the property at the Old Stone Church. Still, things were tight. The diocese sent funds now and then to support the parish; and in 1952 Father Wellnitz, the pastor, regularly drove the school bus to take the children from Shawnee and vicinity to the school in New Straitsville.¹⁷

In 1951, under the leadership of Father Wellnitz, discussions were started concerning the possibility of reconstructing the Old Stone Church. At that time one wall and part of the sanctuary remained. A letter from Father Wellnitz noted, “It is not right that this historic Church, which one warmed the hearts of pioneers with her Divine Faith during their lifetime, and then gathered their sacred bones to her bosom in death, should be left a prey to forgetfulness.” The Holy Name Society of St. Mary’s and the people of Shawnee wanted to restore the old church to its original state, as a shrine and a historical landmark. Bishop Ready gave his approval to the project. However, very little money was collected and the “cold realities of remoteness of the Church, plus the difficulty of constant and vigilant maintenance” ended the effort.

In the Marian Year of 1954, pilgrimages and devotions were held all year.

Bishop Ready in 1955 wrote to Mother M. Gonzaga at the Seminary of the Sacred Heart in Stella Niagara, to see whether she might send three Sisters to staff a school in Shawnee. He told her the area had about ninety children in the Catholic schools, including those from Shawnee, New Straitsville, Moxahala, and the countryside. He noted, “They are good people and the past years they have shown a great loyalty to the Church.” The Sisters, he suggested, could live at St. Aloysius Academy if they did not want to live in Shawnee.¹⁸ This effort did not succeed and, after St. Augustine School closed in 1955, the children of the parish still could attend St. Bernard’s school in Corning.

The area still was declining in the late 1950s. At the end of 1958, Father McEwan noted that the best family of the parish had left Shawnee in September and the largest family was then making arrangements to leave. “Still the old folks hang on for dear life and come to Mass in all the snow and ice and with all their aches and pains!”

The area was stricken with poverty, unemployment, and decay. Towns were dead and dying. Young people were forced to leave for employment elsewhere. Churches were empty. Bishop Issenmann, newly appointed to Columbus, came to visit Shawnee and was shown a new wall that the parishioners had put up between the rectory and the church. He thought “there should be a statue at the corner.” Considering the “heart-rendering” sight of the Old Stone Church, Father McEwan suggested to the Bishop that a shrine to Our Lady could be built at the new wall. The idea was to use a dozen truckloads of stone from the old church (the standing walls would not be disturbed); the talents of a retired stone mason in the parish; and other retired and unemployed men at $10 per day, over a period of three or four weeks. The money collected for reconstruction of the Old Stone Church would be used for this shrine.

The plans, however, soon exploded. A road had to be built to get to the old church, and even the bulldozer got stuck in the mud as the road was built. The twelve loads of stone became 72 loads. The 3 or 4 weeks became eight. The money ran out. But, as Father McEwan wrote, “we have something that is both massive and monumental, yet at the same time so delicately exquisite as to be breath-taking. How it came to be so no one knows. There was no architect with blueprints for the men to follow. Just one of the many odd and strange things that have happened since we put the first stone of the Grotto in place. For example, is it just coincidence that at the very minute we were putting the famous old ‘Thou art Peter...’ stone in place, the million dollar water pipeline from Shawnee to Burr Oak Lake was begun; or that the local brick plant started full blast for the first time in 3 years? Is it coincidence that so many other strange things are happening here?”

the southeast corner of the church, was dedicated by Bishop Issenmann on October 11, 1959, before a throng of over 2,500 persons. Participating in the Pontifical Mass were Fathers Thomas Duffy, Robert Manning, Michael Wellnitz, Francis Yonkus, O.P., Julian Schaefer, James J. Carroll, Charles Foeller, and James McEwan.21

Pastors and their helpers in this era were:
- Rev. Brice A. Metzger, 1971-1972, assistant at New Lexington
- Revs. Mario Serraglio and Homer Blubaugh, 1974-1977, pastor and assistant at New Lexington
- Rev. Richard F. Dodd, 1984-1986 (of Junction City) He was delegated to administer the two parishes effective Sept. 5, 1984.
- Rev. Frank P. Lane, 1986-July 1988 (of Corning and then New Lexington)
- Rev. Mark Ghiloni, associate pastor of the consortium (see below) with residence at Corning, beginning in 1987; in September of 1988 he was appointed Administrator Pro Tem of the consortium and continued as such through March, 1989; in 1990 he was appointed pastor at Crooksville and continued as associate in the consortium.

During Father Huber’s pastorate (1972-73) a fire seriously damaged the school building and it was razed.22 The old convent was rented out to a large family for only $20 a month. In the summer of 1974 Fathers Serraglio and Blubaugh told Bishop Herrmann, “we feel ashamed to see people living in such a place since it belongs to the church,” because it was in such poor condition.23 They asked permission to sell it, but there is no record of any answer.

In the mid-1970s there were 150 Catholics in the parish territory. The October count for 1975 was just 81; there were fifty youths, of whom twenty attended religious education. Shawnee’s downtown consisted of only a grocery store, a furniture store, a small post office, a tiny beauty shop, and a saloon. The other buildings stood vacant, dilapidated, or in ruins. Population was a little over 700. The brick plant, the primary local industry, had shut down in 1962 and only one industry remained, employing a few people. All the other residents were retired or on welfare or worked elsewhere.24

On September 27, 1981 Bishop Herrmann came to Shawnee and celebrated the parish’s centennial Mass.

Population decline and economic hardships hit all of the southern Perry County parishes in the late 1980s. In 1986 St. Augustine Parish in New Straitsville and St. Mary Parish in Shawnee, together with St. Bernard in Corning and St. Philip Neri in Murray City, were formed into the Perry County Consortium of Parishes, under the care of the priests living at Corning. New Lexington was added to the consortium in 1987.

In August of 1988 it was announced that the parishes of New Straitsville and Shawnee would be merged. This was canonically effective on October 22 and the new body was named the Parish of the Community of St. Peter, in honor of the Old Stone Church of Monday Creek. Mass was offered in St. Augustine Church on Saturday evening in October and November, but in December and January was moved to Shawnee to avoid the problem of getting up the hill in New Streatorville in the snow. The parishioners had decided that the two parishes should be joined and the church that was in better condition be used as the place of worship and this was made the recommendation of the vicariate Pastoral Council to the Bishop.25

In 1989 a joint meeting was held by the people of the merged parish community, including Fathers Ghiloni and Dodd and Sisters Mary Ann Creely, O.P., and Mary Margaret Fischer, S.N.D. de N. Among other items discussed, it was noted that the income of the two churches together barely met ordinary operating expenses of about $20,000 and that to bring either one of the churches to a state of “good repair” would cost between $75,000 and $110,000.26

St. Augustine Church in New Straitsville was closed in 1990 and Bishop Griffin said then that a decision regarding St. Mary’s might be expected in two years. During those two years the parish was not able to meet its ordinary expenses and the buildings continued to deteriorate. Evaluation of ministry to the area continued until it was decided to close St. Mary’s, in part because fewer priests were available. The parish was canonically suppressed as of January 30, 1992. The closing was announced by Bishop Griffin at Mass on Saturday, February 1, 1992. Later it was announced that the church would be razed soon after its closing. A movement was started to save the church, headed by Don Wohrle of Columbus, as the “St. Mary’s Preservation Committee.” The committee agreed to establish a legal fund to represent them in blocking the demolition but nothing came of this. It was a very painful time for all, including the Bishop.

The last Mass in St. Mary Church was offered by Bishop Griffin on June 6, 1992. He allowed the parishioners to decide which of the area parishes they would attend in the future, since he recognized that many had family ties or other associations with the various churches. The churches included St. Bernard in Corning, eight miles to the east, and St. Rose in New Lexington, nine miles to the north. St. John in Logan is about fifteen miles distant, from which missionaries visited the Old Stone Church in the previous century. St. Mary Church was razed on July 10 and 11 that summer. The organ was sold to St. John’s Lutheran Church in Chehalis, Washington. Whatever else could not be sold the people were allowed to take. By that time the former convent had already been sold. The rectory, in which Sister Mary Ann Creely had been living, was sold and she moved to New Lexington.

St. Mary Parish had been established when Shawnee was quite prosperous. That prosperity was very short-lived, but the set patterns of Church life, the pain involved with reducing or eliminating services, and especially the desire for the good of souls, kept the parish in operation long after it was viable in any human terms.

Among notable people who came from St. Mary’s was Joseph Ferguson, long-time Auditor of State of Ohio. Also among the members were the Joyce family, who developed 7-UP and made it the basis of a multi-million dollar business.

Akin to the foregoing [report of pickpockets at the cathedral], but of an infinitely more heinous nature, is the sacrilegious robbery of the ciborium containing the Holy Sacrament from the church of St. Vincent, in Mount Vernon, on the night of the 20th December. We again and again implore the reverend clergy not to leave the Blessed Sacrament in a church at night, except in a secure iron safe, whenever there is the slightest danger of such impious profanation. To render this warning more impressive, if possible, we subjoin
the letter written on this most melancholy occasion by Rev. Mr. Brent:
MT. VERNON, KNOX CO., O., Dec. 28, 1855.

MOST REV. FATHER:— When you read this your heart, like mine, will be sad indeed. A very great misfortune has befallen us. One day last week, Wednesday, or Thursday night, perhaps, some one opened the north-east window of the church, found the key of the Tabernacle, opened it, and carried off the Ciborium, Blessed Eucharist, and all! When I came up from Danville, Sunday evening, I saw the key in the tabernacle, which astonished me; and when I went to take it out I found the door was a little open; I opened it, and what a pang struck me when I saw there was nothing there! I did not speak of this on Christmas day, but I told it to a few of my own people, and pious souls who might weep with me at this sacrilege offered to our dear Lord. It appears that several robberies and attempts to rob were made on other places in town during those same nights, but no one was caught. You will, of course, know best whether to make this publicly known or not. Had it not been for this most sad affair, we should have spent a happy day, indeed, with our Infant Jesus, as my people had made the church look extremely well on the Saturday before with evergreens, pictures, lights, etc., and Mr. Lawton had taken more than usual pains with his choir, that they might do well on that great day. How great the love of our Saviour, who exposes himself to such outrages for our sakes!

With the best wishes of the season to you and yours, I remain, in sorrow, your affectionate son in God,

J. BRENT
