Dear Fr. Piotr, Just a note of thanks for the wonderful homecoming for Father Fitzgerald this past Tuesday. Father, you left no stone unturned to make sure everything was perfect – and it was. All Saints is truly blessed to have you as pastor. Please convey my gratitude to everyone...who came ...who participated...who shared stories...who quietly grieved. Father Fitz and I always knew we were blessed to have had 30 years with wonderful people in a wonderful parish. But I must say, it was overwhelming! The love in that church was palpable and surely Father Fitz was deeply touched – as was I. Thank you, Sr. Angela

So what do the colors of the vestments mean? The vestments worn by priests and deacons have specific meanings related to the Church calendar. In the coming weeks we will identify the vestment colors and what they represent. The development of the liturgical colors we see every day at Mass appears to be linked to the development of the liturgical calendar. During its first 300 years, the Church's only holy days were Sunday, Easter and Pentecost, although local churches celebrated the feast days of their local martyrs with Mass at the saint's tomb. After Emperor Constantine published his Edict of Milan in 315, which permitted the Church to emerge from the catacombs, every aspect of liturgical life started to expand. In the fourth century, Christmas and Epiphany were added to the calendar. Christians in Asia Minor were celebrating the Assumption of Our Lady by the fifth century. Local churches also began to dress their clergy in colored vestments to emphasize the special character of holy days and liturgical seasons.

Red: is the color of blood and represents the burning love of the Holy Spirit. Red vestments are worn on Palm Sunday, Good Friday, all feasts of Our Lord's Passion, on Pentecost and on the feast of martyrs.

White: represents joy, innocence, purity, and glory. White vestments are worn during the seasons of Easter and Christmas; on all feasts of Our Lord other than his Passion; on feasts of the Blessed Virgin; the angels and those saints who were not martyrs.
