St. Francis of Assisi

St. Francis began life as the son of a wealthy cloth merchant in Assisi. His early life was spent in frivolous enjoyment. But a series of harsh experiences, including war, captivity, and sickness turned his heart from worldly ambitions. A break-through in his life came when he kissed a leper whom he met on the road. Afterward he took to emptying his father's warehouse to give to the poor. When his father publicly upbraided him, he stripped off his own fine clothes and vowed henceforth to recognize no other father but God in heaven.

While praying before a crucifix in a ruined chapel, Francis heard a voice commanding him to “repair” the Church. At first he took this quite literally, setting about rebuilding old church buildings. But in time he repaired the Church in a more profound way. Attracting followers, he launched a new order, the Friars Minor, who, in their strict faithfulness to the Gospel-seeking out the poor, the sick, the marginalized, embracing poverty and nonviolence-turned the values of their society upside down.

The stories of his life reflect the joy and freedom that were hallmarks of his spirituality. In his life and in his relationship with the poor, women, outcasts, and all of creation, Francis represented the emergence of a new model of human and cosmic community. His last years were marked by terrible suffering, including the wounds of the cross on his hands and feet. He died on October 3, 1226. “All praise be yours, my Lord, through those who grant pardon for love of you.” –St. Francis
