Government is Spending Millions of Your Tax Dollars to Harvest Organs From Babies Who are Still Alive

Documents obtained by the Center For Medical Progress (CMP) via a FOIA request suggest that the government paid millions of dollars to the University of Pittsburgh so it could harvest tissue from aborted babies for research. What's more is that supposedly these babies' organs were harvested before they were killed.

They obtained 252 pages of new documents about the university's practices from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services." These documents – obtained with a "Freedom of Information Act request" and through the pressure of a subsequent lawsuit – show that the government gave the University of Pittsburgh "at least $2.7 million in federal tax dollars over the past five years to become a 'tissue hub' for aborted baby body parts for scientific research."

The University of Pittsburgh document reportedly claimed that "labor induction" is the 'procedure that will be used to obtain the tissue.'" So that would mean they are giving birth to live babies in order to harvest tissue. The University states the fetal organs do not undergo ischemia—lose their blood supply—until 'after the tissue collection procedure.' This means the organs are still receiving blood supply from the fetal heartbeat during the tissue collection.

To date, Pitt has not discontinued this practice.

Meet Zane, the New Gerber Baby. His Mom Beat Breast Cancer, Was Told She'd Never Have Kids

To win the coveted Gerber Spokesbaby title, People Magazine notes Zane managed to win out over a whopping 90,000 other babies from throughout the country. Zane was declared the champion because of his "cheerful attitude, captivating giggles, and playful smile."

In addition to baby bragging rights, little Zane will garner $25,000, a $1,000 supply of baby clothes, and a year's worth of baby food—all appetizing prizes for a baby ready for his close-up.

Scientists Want People Fitted With Euthanasia Chip That Kills You at First Sign of Dementia

A recent article published by leading bioethics journal "The Hastings Center Report", has proposed an implant that would automatically trigger a lethal drug at the onset of dementia. <https://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/abs/10.1002/hast.1257>

In the report, co-authors Margaret Battin and Brent M. Kiouss, proposed the introduction of an "advance directive implant" (ADI) in an article titled "Ending One's Life in Advance". There is even a precedent for this proposed implant: Norplant, a controversial contraceptive implant that was withdrawn from the UK in 1999. Like Norplant, the ADI would be reversible and programmable, but the drugs it would release would cause death instantaneously. It would likely be implanted at the onset of dementia and programmed to activate according to the patient's prognosis.

Abortion is the Leading Cause of Death Worldwide, Killing 24 Million People So Far This Year

Nothing kills more people than abortion. Nothing!

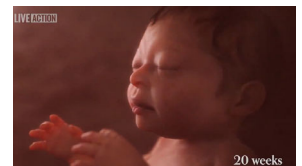

Half way through 2021, the world-wide abortion numbers already are mind-boggling. Worldometer, which keeps a running tally of various statistics, reported 24.2 million abortions so far this year. The total is based on data from the World Health Organization.

Scientists overwhelmingly confirm that a unique, living human being comes into existence at the moment of conception. And an abortion intentionally kills that human being – a valuable, irreplaceable child.

Yet, little attention is given to preventing or even acknowledging these babies' deaths. Quite the opposite, saving unborn babies from abortion is considered highly controversial, and pro-life advocates constantly are disparaged for their work.

'New Children's Book "I Can Hear Music" Teaches Kids The Humanity of Unborn Babies

A book called I Can Hear Music, was published in January. The colorful pages and rhythmic wording follow an unborn baby as he or she begins to hear in the womb – something that can happen as early as 18 weeks.

From the beginning, the story shows a pregnant mother and her unborn baby encountering music everywhere, from a band playing outside to a church choir. But the little one's first – and favorite – song is the mother's beating heart. "The love you hold in it sings to me from the start," the book reads.

As science progresses, it only reveals more of the humanity of the unborn, the author, Brendan Lyons, said.

China's One-Child Policy Has Left 1 Million Old People Totally Alone With No Family

The Chinese Communist Party's One Child Policy had devastating effects on families that still are being felt years after its end.

The oppressive population control measure, instituted in 1980 and ended in 2015, included forced sterilizations and forced abortions as well as severe penalties and job losses for families who violated the law.

Now, researchers are blaming the policy for another growing problem: no one to care for aging Chinese citizens. The Macau Daily Times reports at least 1 million older adults in China are worried about a lack of support in their old age because their only child died.

It is not clear how many mothers were forced to abort their unborn babies during the decades of the One Child Policy. Based on 2020 census data, researchers estimate that about 30 million men in China cannot find wives because so many girls have been aborted.

Maria Andrejczyk Auctions Off Her Silver Medal To Pay For An Infant's Heart Surgery

The star athlete posted on her Facebook page in Polish that she was selling the medal to help 8-month-old Miłoszek Małysa, and wrote in part, "And in this way, I also want to help. It's for him that I am auctioning my Olympic silver medal."

The silver medal, which is the only one Andrejczyk has ever won at the Olympics, ended up selling for $125,000 after being purchased by the supermarket chain Zabka. After buying the medal at auction, Zabka ended up returning it to her. So, she helped raise a bunch of money for Miłoszek and didn't even have to lose her medal. <https://dailycaller.com/2021/08/18/maria-andrejczyk-silver-medal-auction-heart-surgery-infant/>

'Muppet Babies' Tackles Gender Identity As Gonzo Becomes Gonzorella

The Muppet character, Gonzo, has "transitioned" to a girl, Gonzorella. That is why he is wearing a dress to the "royal ball." He does more than wear a dress—he instructs Miss Piggy and Summer that "doing things a little different can be fun."

The message to children is: a boy can be a girl, and vice versa. Making this choice, they are told, is not something abnormal, it's just "a little different." Moreover, it can be "fun" to reject your sex and pretend that you belong to the opposite sex.

This needs to be called out for what it is: child abuse. Anyone who is even remotely knowledgeable about what sex transitioning entails—the physical and psychological problems that boys and girls experience are multiple—knows how pernicious this process is. Seven in ten of those who transition are girls wanting to be boys, and the extent of their suffering is well documented.

Poll On Abortion

The Susan B. Anthony List released a new poll that demonstrates a majority of voters were "more likely" to support restrictions on abortion after 15 weeks once they learned that unborn children have beating hearts, can feel pain, and can move around in the womb.

"At 15 weeks, unborn children can feel pain, and most European countries limit abortions at this point. There is strong support among the American people for our nation's laws to finally catch up with science and international norms," said Marjorie Dannenfelser, the group's president.
