It's a fact of life - every human being holds a bias of some sort. For some, the bias relates to race. For others, it can be age, gender, socioeconomic status, even political affiliation.

The term "Implicit Bias" (also known as Unconscious Bias) refers to those biases that one might not even know they have. These biases are unrelated to one's character but can still get you into trouble.

During this interactive training workshop, we explore the various pitfalls associated with bias-based decision making, and provide the participant with the tools they need to make more informed decisions.
