So now faith, hope, and love abide, these three; but the greatest of these is love. 1
Corinthians 13:13

This concludes the beautiful and poetic dissertation by Paul on the nature of love. It is often used at Christian weddings. But what Paul reveals is a deeper reality than romantic love. When this is read at a wedding, I will comment that weddings are about hearts and flowers but marriage is not. However, I do remind the groom not to forget the hearts and flowers. But love goes beyond infatuation. Love is, in the end, an act of will that commits one to another. It is not always pretty. It is not always enjoyable. But true and faithful love is ever so rewarding. Pray for the courage and strength to love as you should.
