“So if the Son sets you free, you will be free indeed.” John 8:36

We talk so much about freedom at this time of year. But what is freedom? Is it the ability to do whatever you want to do? If that is the case, how does your freedom relate to someone else's? Would you be free to, say, kill someone if that is what you want? Of course not. The sense of unbridled liberty is an Enlightenment notion. Our freedom is connected to the good of all around us. We must exist as members of society and if the exercise of our freedom causes others pain or disadvantage, then it is something that we ought not do. Sounds simple but so many people today do not get it.
