Love does no wrong to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Romans 13:10

Paul spends a lot of time in the Letter to the Romans addressing how we are justified by faith and not the Law. Yet he sees fit to discuss the law in terms of love. I suppose we can extrapolate from this that love is the outpouring action that follows faith and makes what we do just and right. By that I mean that we are absolutely justified by faith but that faith is nourished in the knowledge of the love of God. God's love impels us to love each other. After all, if God loves someone, who are we to do otherwise? And God loves everyone, regardless of whether they return that love. And so should we.
