“But love your enemies, and do good, and lend, expecting nothing in return, and your reward will be great, and you will be sons of the Most High, for he is kind to the ungrateful and the evil. Be merciful, even as your Father is merciful.” Luke 6:35–36

Does this not go against the very grain of human nature? Doing good to those you do not like? But this is precisely what would fix our world today. We do not have to agree but we do have to coexist. From where did this notion that if you do not agree with me, I must hate you come? There has been civility between factions for ages. But not anymore. The divisions are so deep that we do not even trust someone who disagrees with us to be a person of good character. This must stop. We must embrace Jesus' call to love everyone, even our enemies.

Go raibh síocháin Chríost a bheith in éineacht leat.
