Thirteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Sheesh. You teach this section of Luke's gospel for years, and then you read a great commentary by Daniel Hamm, SJ and see everything differently. Scripture endlessly bubbles up with unexplored nuances and insights. We should never let a difficult passage go until it blesses us.

The Samaritans in the north and the "Jews" in the south---a strange distinction, since the Samaritans were Jews too---had been estranged for centuries before Jesus, James and John attempted to pass through their land on the way to Jerusalem. The reason is that the Jerusalem Temple was a huge source of revenue for the south, since the book of Deuteronomy required all Jewish men to travel three times a year "to the place where God shall choose" (16:16).

But the Samaritans always read that passage as their own sacred location of Mount Gerizim, and they resented Jews traveling through to Jerusalem. The south benefitted spiritually and economically from all those travelers, and the north felt left out of the promises of the Torah that were originally meant for them.

The Eastern Orthodox church in our neighborhood has a sign outside: Teaching the truth for two thousand years. That's to remind Roman Catholics that they are the original descendants of the faith hijacked during the schism of 1054.

Hard feelings abound everywhere when it comes to who got there first. We only have to look at the street names in our cities---Huron, Cherokee, Osage---to remember the First Peoples. The devastation of that encounter is only now coming to the surface. During next years' NBA championships you could bring up the Warriors to the fans in Oakland, but I wouldn't recommend it.

What "rightful ownership" has been hijacked from you in your life?

Decimo-tercer Domingo de Tiempo Ordinario

Que caray. He enseñado acerca de esta sección del evangelio de Lucas por años, y luego leí un comentario de Daniel Hamm, SJ y vi todo de una manera diferente. Las escrituras burbujean infinitamente con matices y perspectivas inexploradas. No debemos soltar un pasaje difícil hasta que nos haya bendecido.

Los samaritanos en el norte y los "judíos" en el sur---una distinción extraña, ya que los samaritanos también eran judíos---habían estado separados por siglos antes de que Jesús, Santiago y Juan intentaran pasar por su tierra en camino a Jerusalén. El Templo de Jerusalén era una gran fuente de ingresos para el sur por la razón de que el libro de Deuteronomio requería que todos los hombres judíos viajaran tres veces al año "al lugar que Dios ha de elegir" (16:16).

Pero los samaritanos siempre han interpretado ese pasaje como si esa ubicación sagrada fuera su propio Monte Garizín, y resentían que los judíos viajaran por ahí hacia Jerusalén. El sur sacaba beneficio espiritual y económico de todos esos viajeros, y el norte se sentía excluido de las promesas del Torá que originalmente estaban destinadas a ellos.

La iglesia Ortodoxa Oriental que está en nuestro vecindario tiene un cartel afuera que dice: Enseñando por dos mil años. Eso es para recordarle a los Católicos Romanos que ellos son los descendientes originales de la fe que les fue robada durante la división del año 1054.

Siempre abundan los sentimientos heridos por todos lados cuando se trata de quien llegó primero. Solamente hay que ver los nombres de las calles en nuestras ciudades—Huron, Cherokee, Osage—para recordar a los Primeros Pueblos. La devastación de ese encuentro apenas ahora está saliendo a la superficie. Durante los campeonatos de la NBA el próximo año solamente atrévete a mencionar a los Warriors a los fanáticos en Oakland, pero no te lo recomiendo.

“ ¿Qué propiedad legítima te ha sido arrebatada en la vida? ”
