Twenty-Second Sunday in Ordinary Time

Ah, time. It sure gives you perspective. And if looking back at your past behavior doesn't send you careening to the back of the room, hiding from the hosts who've invited you to say a few words at the reception, well, how blessed are you. The many roadblocks to authentic, holy living haven't tripped you up.

I have somehow arrived at a place of deep gratitude for the insights into my own sins. I almost crave them, probably because they humble me and, sure enough, I've figured out that is exactly when God shows up.

A humble and contrite heart, oh God, you will not despise (Ps. 15: 17). I've experienced this a thousand times. For some reason this is the quickest (but certainly not the easiest!) entrée into the mercy of God.

Think back to a time when you were humbled. Maybe you were caught in a lie, or you made a costly mistake at work. Or maybe you've experienced deep humility by, after an expanse of time, reflecting on an issue about which you were vocal, and absolutely certain you were right, and realizing how very wrong you were. Gulp.

I am a recovering know-it-all. But I am most humbled when I remember the kindness and patience so many people extended to me in the midst of my stupidity, especially in my youth. Parents are the best at this. They love and forgive their kids, even when their kids are temporarily insane.

That's why I love that feeling of being humbled. I know for sure that God sees me in that state, and no exalted seat at the party can compare to the grace of being under that Gaze.

What experience of being humbled has been transformed into a redemptive experience?

Vigésimo-Segundo Domingo de Tiempo Ordinario

Ay, el tiempo. Ese sí que te ofrece perspectiva. Y si recordar tu comportamiento pasado no te hace salir corriendo hasta la parte trasera del lugar, a esconderte de los anfitriones que te invitaron a decir algunas palabras en la recepción, pues qué bendecido eres. Todavía no te han hecho tropezar los tantos y tantos obstáculos que conlleva el vivir una vida auténticamente santa.

De algún modo yo he llegado a un punto de sentir una profunda gratitud por el entendimiento de mis propios pecados. Casi los anhele, probablemente porque me hacen humilde, y en efecto, he descubierto que precisamente es cuando Dios se manifiesta.

Un corazón humilde y arrepentido, oh Señor no despreciarás (Sal. 15:17). He experimentado esto miles de veces. Por algún motivo es la manera más rápida (aunque definitivamente no la más fácil!) de obtener la misericordia de Dios.

Trata de recordar un tiempo cuando fuiste humillado. Tal vez te atraparon en una mentira, o cometiste un error costoso en tu trabajo. O tal vez has experimentado verdadera y profunda humildad después de un tiempo de reflexionar acerca de algún tema del cual diste tu opinión, y que estuviste totalmente convencido de que estabas en lo correcto, para después darte cuenta de que estabas muy equivocado. Ups.

Yo me estoy recuperando del mal de ser sabelotodo. Pero me hace humilde el recordar la bondad y paciencia que tanta gente me tuvo en medio de mi estupidez, especialmente en mi juventud. Los padres son los mejores en esto. Ellos aman y perdonan a sus hijos, aún cuando esos hijos estén temporalmente dementes.

Por eso me encanta ese sentimiento de sentirme humillada. Yo sé con certeza que Dios me ve en ese estado, y ningún lugar de honor en ninguna fiesta se compara a la gracia de estar bajo esa Mirada.

¿Qué experiencia de ser humillado se ha transformado en una experiencia redentora?
