Twenty-Second Sunday in Ordinary Time

Whenever I hear this challenging gospel I think of the 2001 movie, A Beautiful Mind. It tells the shocking story of John Nash, Nobel Laureate in Economics, whose life is filled with interesting, companionable, sometimes frightening, but always utterly imagined friends. He is deeply schizophrenic, and we don't realize that until certain revelations throughout the movie cause us to question who in his life actually exists.

He finally has victory over his illness by training his mind to ignore his hallucinations. Whenever he encounters his "friends," he forces himself to ignore them. This is how I feel about Jesus' admonition that those who harbor evil thoughts, as well as a number of deadly sins, are defiled. It's what we're thinking about on the inside that corrupts us and makes us sad. I try to train my brain to forgive the irritating behaviors of people around me, as they forgive my own.

Think about gossip. Isn't it delicious to hear something unsavory or scandalous about someone? It's especially precious if it's about someone we know, and even better if it's about someone who has, in the tiniest ways, hurt our feelings at some point in the past. Then---yippee!---we hear something uncharitable about them, and we start marinating that news over and over in our hearts. We ruminate and luxuriate in it, and, soon enough, we are defiled with the spiciness of sweet revenge.

And it is sweet, for a minute. But in the end it makes us less.. I want what's going on in my brain to match the person I present to the world, especially since that's the brain that asks for Jesus' mercy every day.

What uncharitable thoughts are you training your brain to ignore?

Vigesimalsegundo Domingo de Tiempo Ordinario

Siempre que escucho este evangelio tan estimulante pienso en la película del 2001 llamada A Beautiful Mind (Una Mente Hermosa). Cuenta la impactante historia de John Nash, premio Nobel de Economía, cuya vida está llena de amigos interesantes, amigables, a veces aterradores, pero siempre completamente imaginarios. Está totalmente esquizofrénico, y no nos damos cuenta hasta que ciertas revelaciones a través de la película nos hacen cuestionarnos quién en su vida realmente existe.

Finalmente obtiene victoria sobre su enfermedad al entrenar a su mente a que ignore sus alucinaciones. Cuando se encuentra a sus "amigos," se obliga a sí mismo a ignorarlos. Así siento que es la amonestación de Jesús cuando dice que aquellos que albergan pensamientos malvados, así como muchos pecados capitales, están contaminados. Es lo que pensamos por dentro lo que nos corrompe y nos entristece. Yo trato de entrenar a mi cerebro a que perdone los comportamientos irritantes de la gente que me rodea, tal como ellos perdonan los míos.

Piensa en el chisme. ¿No es delicioso escuchar algo desagradable o escandaloso sobre alguien? Es aún más valioso si se trata de alguien que conocemos, e incluso mejor si es alguien quien ha, aunque sea en la más mínima forma, lastimado nuestros sentimientos en el pasado. Entonces—¡yupi! —oímos algo poco caritativo acerca de ellos, y comenzamos a marinar las nuevas una y otra vez en nuestros corazones. Lo rumiamos y nos deleitamos en él y, pronto, nos contaminamos con lo sabroso de la dulce venganza.

Y es dulce, por un minuto. Pero al final nos hace menos ... Quiero que lo que está pasando en mi cerebro coincida con la persona que presento al mundo, especialmente porque ese mismo cerebro el que pide la misericordia de Jesús todos los días.

¿Qué pensamientos poco caritativos estás entrenando a tu cerebro a ignorar?
