For NYC born-and-bred teenager Tory Hedderman, it feels like the end of the world when his family moves to a sleepy West Virginia town. His refusal to stand for the Pledge of Allegiance only brings him further trouble at school. Frustration and apathy build until he is caught committing an act of vandalism against the memorial statue of a fallen soldier. Sentenced to community service at a local veterans' residential home, Tory initially resents his situation. As he bonds with wounded soldier Mitch Kern and learns hard lessons from a mysterious resident who seems to be "watching over" him, Tory begins to understand the profound meaning of loyalty and sacrifice. Torn between his anti-war parents and his newest friend, the daughter of a fallen soldier, and with the survival of the group home possibly resting on his shoulders, Tory is forced to make a decision between loyalty and life-as-usual.
