With Thanks: “Dear Ladies, We wish to thank you so very much to all the wonderful women who put on the delicious meal for my mother’s funeral (Stephanie Brunton). It was wonderful having this huge stress lifted from us during this difficult and busy time. Your kindness through all of this is truly appreciated. We recently sent a $150 donation to St. Isidore as a token of our appreciation. Thank you again for everything you have done for our family.

Sincerely, Stuart, Ashley & Adam Brunton”

Aug. 24th: Feast of St. Bartholomew

Saint Bartholomew is mentioned in the synoptic gospels and Acts as one of the Twelve Apostles. His name, a patronymic, means "son of Tolomai" and scholars believe he is the same as Nathanael mentioned in St. John's Gospel, who says he is from Cana and that Jesus called him an "Israelite...incapable of deceit." The Roman Martyrology says he preached in India and Greater Armenia, where he was flayed and beheaded by King Astyages. Tradition has the place as Abanopolis on the west coast of the Caspian Sea. He also preached in Mesopotamia, Persia, and

August 25th: Feast of St. Louis

In St. Louis IX of France were united the qualities of a just and upright sovereign, a fearless warrior, and a Saint. This crusading king was a living embodiment of the Christianity of the time: he lived for the welfare of his subjects and the glory of God. His father was Louis VIII, and his mother the redoubtable Queen Blanche, daughter of King Alfonso of Castile and Eleanor of England. Louis, the oldest living son, was born on April 25, 1214, and there was christened. Much of his virtue is attributed to his mother's care, for the Queen devoted herself to her children's education. Louis had tutors who made him a master of Latin, taught him to speak easily in public and write with dignity and grace. He was instructed in the arts of war and government and all other kingly accomplishments. But Blanche's primary concern was to implant in him a deep regard and awe for everything related to religion. She used often to say to him as he was growing up, "I love you my dear son, as much as a mother can love her child; but I would rather see you dead at my feet than that you should commit a mortal sin."

St. Louis never forgot his upbringing. His friend, the Sieur de Joinville, who accompanied him on his first crusade to the Holy Land, relates that the King once asked him, "What is God?" Joinville replied, "Sire, it is that which is so good that there can be nothing better." "Well," said the King, "now tell me, would you rather be a leper or commit a mortal sin?" The spectacle of the wretched lepers who wandered along the highways of medieval Europe might well have prompted a sensitive conscience to ask such a question. "I would rather commit thirty mortal sins," answered Joinville, in all candor, "than be a leper." Louis expostulated with him earnestly for making such a reply. "When a man dies," he said, "he is healed of leprosy in his body; but when a man who has committed a mortal sin dies he cannot know of a certainty that he has in his lifetime repented ... wherefore he must stand in great fear lest that leprosy of sin last as long as God is in Paradise."

St. Louis went on two crusades, on the last one dysentery and other diseases broke out among the crusaders, and Louis' second son, who had been born at Damietta during the earlier crusade, died. That same day the King and his eldest son, Philip, sickened, and it was soon apparent that Louis would not recover. He was speechless all the next morning, but at three in the afternoon he said, "Into Thy hands I commend my spirit," and quickly breathed his last. His bones and heart were taken back to France and kept enshrined in the abbey-church of St. Denis, until they were scattered at the time of the Revolution. Louis was strong, idealistic, austere, and just. He was canonized in 1297.

AUG. 27TH: FEAST OF ST. MONICA

"For my part, my son, I no longer find pleasure in anything that this life holds. What I am doing here still, or why I am still here, I do not know, for worldly hope has withered away for me. One thing only there was for which I desired to linger to linger in this life: to see you a Catholic Christian before I died. And my God has granted this to me more lavishly than I could have hoped, letting me see even you spurning earthly happiness to be his servant. What am I still doing here?" ~ St. Monica, speaking to her son, St. Augustine.

August 28th: Feast of St. Augustine

"Late have I loved you, beauty so old and so new: late have I loved you. And see, you were within and I was in the external world and sought you there, and in my unlovely state I plunged into those lovely created things which you made. You were with me, and I was not with you. The lovely things kept me far from you, though if they did not have their existence in you, they had no existence at all. You called and cried out loud and shattered my deafness. You were radiant and resplendent, you put to flight my blindness. You were fragrant, and I drew in my breath and now pant after you. I tasted you, and I feel but hunger and thirst for you. You touched me, and I am set on fire to attain the peace which is yours." ~ St. Augustine
