When I'm participating in the sacraments and rituals of my Catholic faith, the language of the senses is apparent there, too. This is a sensual religion, with its art and architecture, its liturgies, its music and chants, its smells and bells. Catholicism proves that something we touch, like a rosary, can prime the mind for prayer. It proves that something we smell, like incense, can lift our thoughts to heaven. Something we see, like a crucifix, reminds us that God became flesh.

That last fact is an essential one to remember if we want to be comfortable with our physical selves. It's sometimes easy to forget that God took on a human body and moved through this world in company with other human bodies— seeing, hearing, smelling, touching, and tasting, and showing that the human body could be a worthy vehicle for the divine. God became flesh, like ours, in the person of Jesus Christ. We miss out on so much if we gloss over that fact, if we ignore the senses in favor of the spiritual without seeing how the two work together.

St. Ignatius of Loyola, the founder of the Jesuit order, certainly understood the connection between the physical and the spiritual. He believed that we can find God in all things—a conviction that lies at the core of Ignatian spirituality. Does God really speak to us through a blue sky, through the sound of laughter, through the taste of dinner? Absolutely, St. Ignatius would say. You don't turn your back on the created world to find meaning and purpose; rather, God reveals himself to us through the very concrete stuff of our lives, through our bodies, through the things we experience with our senses. Walter Burghardt, a twentieth-century Jesuit priest, echoes this idea in these beautiful words:

To be alive is to look. But not merely with my mind—I am not naked intellect. If I am really to respond to the real, my whole being must be alive, vibrating to every throb of the real. Not only mind but eyes; not only eyes but smell and taste, hearing and touching. For reality is not reducible to some far-off, abstract, intangible God in- the-sky. Reality is pulsing people; reality is fire and water; reality is a rainbow after a summer storm, a gentle doe streaking through a forest; reality is a foaming mug of Michelob, Beethoven's Mass in D, a child lapping a chocolate ice cream cone; reality is a striding woman with wind-blown hair; reality is Christ Jesus. (Tell the Next Generation: Homilies and Near Homilies [Paulist Press, 1980], 111–12)

Faith is about living life, in all its messy splendor, and doing so with the awareness that God is present throughout it all. It's about recognizing that God speaks to us through our senses and that we can live a richer, more joyful faith if we train ourselves to listen.

Preaching on the Parable of the Good Samaritan, Pope Francis spoke of the fact that to ignore the suffering of another person is to ignore God.

There are four principle characters in the parable. The victim, who was an innocent traveler robbed by bandits and left wounded by the side of the road to Jericho, is a symbol of Jesus. A priest and a Levite, both observant Jews, are also part of the story as is a Samaritan traveler, who is considered an outsider because he is from a different Judean toparchy or province. Bad blood, even enmity, had existed between the observant Jews and Samaritans dating back to the Exile.

Jesus was making the point that our neighbor, whom Jews were charged to love as themselves, (Leviticus 19:18) meant more than their associate and fellow Hebrew, and that religion required more than the performance of religious rites. His teaching was brought home by the observant priest's and Levite's cold-hearted indifference to the suffering in contrast to the compassionate mercy of the despised Samaritan.

It is not automatic that one who frequents the house of God and has known His mercy knows how to love his neighbor," the pope noted. "God's mercy for us is related to our mercy for our neighbor; [...] If I do not open the doors of my heart to the poor, the door stays closed for God too. And this is terrible."

"Showing compassion to others like God shows compassion to us is the sign that one is close to God. To ignore human suffering — what does that mean? It means ignoring God," he told a crowd of pilgrims in St. Peter's Square, adding, "If I do not draw near to the man or woman or child or older person who is suffering," — with their sin and with their wounds — "I cannot draw near to God"

Ignorar el sufrimiento del otro es ignorar a Dios

Predicando acerca Parábola del Buen Samaritano, el Papa Francisco expresó que ignorar el sufrimiento de otra persona es ignorar a Dios.

En la parábola aparecen cuatro personajes principales. La víctima, un viajero inocente asaltado por bandidos, quienes lo dejan herido al lado del camino a Jericó, un símbolo de Jesús. Un sacerdote y un Levita, ambos judíos religiosos. Y un samaritano viajero, un forastero de una toparquía o provincia de Judea. Entre los judíos y samaritanos religiosos existía antipatía e incluso enemistad.

Jesús señalaba que nuestro prójimo, a quienes los judíos debían amar como a sí mismos (Levítico 19,18), significaba ir más allá de sus hermanos judíos y que la religión requiere mucho más que realizar rituales religiosos. Sus enseñanzas dejaban en claro la despiadada indiferencia hacia el sufrimiento de la víctima mostrados por el sacerdote y el Levita, la cual estaba en contraste con la misericordia compasiva del menospreciado samaritano.

"No es automático que quien frecuenta la casa de Dios y conoce su misericordia sepa amar al prójimo", señaló el Papa, "La misericordia de Dios hacia nosotros está relacionada con nuestra misericordia hacia el prójimo; [...] Si yo no abro la puerta de mi corazón al pobre, aquella puerta permanece cerrada, también para Dios, y esto es terrible".
