Funny how the story of someone else's success can make us feel so unworthy. We hear the story of someone's overnight fame, and we develop an instant inferiority complex. But that's ok you say, humility is a Christian virtue, right?

But humility isn't the same as inferiority. As Christians, we know we are sinful creatures saved by the mercy of a perfect God. That's humility. We know everyone fails, so we don't feel more righteous than the guy in the next pew. That's humility too. Yet when God calls us, we can perform unexpectedly great works in His name. Consider John the Baptist. He knew that Jesus was sinless and perfect. John felt awed at the request to baptize his own Savior. But John's humility didn't turn into inferiority. When called he stepped up to the river and did God's will.

What about you? Are you hiding behind false inferiority, or are you humbly doing whatever task God has called you to? Have you said, "Here I am Lord", or "Oh please, pick somebody else not me"?
