My Dear Parish Family:

For just a moment quietly think of that one person in your life who lived or lives God's Law in a manner that is unassuming and void of judgment for the other. They simply love God just as the law commands: with all his/her heart, with all their being and with all their strength and mind. The part of God's command that becomes blurred for many, but not for this person, is their love of neighbor. Because his/her focus is not on himself/herself, the act of love given to another is natural....it just is because God truly lives in them.

This week's Gospel features six characters: Christ, the scholar of the law, the man who was robbed and left to die and three strangers who have an opportunity to help, but only one responds. The two who walked away were a priest and a Levite. Like many others during that time, these men, religious and staunch followers, accepted and adhered to the strict requirements of the Law, forbidding any physical contact with anyone who was deemed unclean. Oddly enough, the one who responds is himself an outcast – a Samaritan. (Samaritans were descendants of Jews who intermarried with gentiles and did not worship in Jerusalem.) The Samaritan not only observes, but stops and unselfishly tends to the victim's every need. At the beginning of the parable, it appears the answer to the scholar's question of who is his neighbor should be the dying man. However, Jesus' response is contrary. He asks the scholar which of the three proved to be a neighbor to the man. Jesus is bringing the scholar into the story as He is doing with you and me. In doing so, and if the scholar (and you and I) emulate the Samaritan, it would be he (and us) who would be the neighbor of another. In breaking the barriers of social boundaries, we clearly see that a neighbor is not defined by religious, cultural or social origins, but by compassion and mercy for the other.

There are many who follow God's Law to the letter and love Him very much. But, loving God does not ensure that they will automatically exude love, compassion and mercy toward another, as we witnessed in the priest and Levite. If we are to be a neighbor to another, our love for God must be real. To be a neighbor is to be like that one person in our lives who lived (or lives) the example of the Good Samaritan: we act toward another just as we breathe the air God has given us...it is natural and selfless.

How do we reach this point in our lives, especially in our current culture, when we can honestly say, "it just is because God truly lives in me." Our Holy Father, Pope Francis, in an address at St. Peter's Square on the Solemnity of Corpus Christi in 2015, said, "The Eucharist, source of love for the life of the Church, is the school of charity and solidarity. Those who are nourished by the Bread of Christ cannot remain indifferent to those who do not have their daily bread. Today, we know it is an ever more serious problem." We cannot be a true neighbor to another on our own. We need the nourishment of the Eucharist, the Word of God in scriptures and the examples of the many men and women who lived and died for Christ and His Church, and we need the example of that one special person in our lives to reinforce our love, compassion and mercy so we, too, may be a neighbor for just one or many who are put in our path. May we never be like the priest and Levite who walked away from the dying man, but a neighbor who stops, sees and acts....

In Christ,
Anne DeMarco, Pastoral Minister
