Dear Parish Family,

“My grace is sufficient for you, for power is made perfect in weakness.” In this line from his second letter to the Corinthians, St. Paul relates what our Lord tells him when he asks, actually begs, that his thorn in the flesh be removed. The Lord does not take the thorn away; at least it does not appear so. Even this great apostle needs to learn from Jesus what is important – “My grace is sufficient.” How true a statement, yet how difficult a reality to live.

We can only speculate on what Paul’s “thorn in the flesh” happens to be for him, but the specifics really do not matter. What Paul learns is that taking a weakness away is not the answer. In fact, he needs the reminder that he accomplishes all the good work in his ministry through God’s grace, which itself is sufficient. If the great St. Paul, apostle and pillar of the Church, had to deal with weaknesses, then certainly we are not immune.

The more we grow closer to the Lord and serve the Church as intentional disciples, the more thorns in the flesh we are going to recognize. It is simply unavoidable. God likely is not going to take them away from us either. They help keep us humble through our realization that all we do depends on God’s grace.

What are our thorns? Each of us has them and we know them well. They constantly remind us of our own weakness, struggles and temptations. They likely could be those particular weaknesses we really want to get rid of in our lives but just cannot seem to do so. That does not mean we give up in trying to lessen or eliminate them altogether. It is, however, an invitation for us to deepen our humility – to realize that is all about God and not all about us. It is an invitation to acknowledge that God’s grace is stronger and more powerful than any human weakness we have. That grace operates and achieves God’s objective despite us, despite our weakness. Because only in that weakness is God’s power made perfect.

If we had no weaknesses, no thorns in the flesh, we would be tempted, like St. Paul, to believe we achieved things on our own, without God. That manifests as pride. The more we realize it is all the grace of God working through us, the less those thorns in the flesh will bother or distract us, even if they remain part of our lives.

Let us ask Mary, our Mother and model of humility who is full of grace, to assist us in accepting our weaknesses and struggles as a way to grow closer to her Son, Jesus, and to realize that His grace is sufficient for us.

In Christ,
Fr. Joe Previte
